

Abstract

5 A control unit in a vehicle is provided which is distinguished by the fact that the power is supplied via a converter that provides an electrical isolation. For the data exchange with external components and other components in the control unit that are not electrically isolated, the component isolated by this electrical isolation is additionally connected to a coupling element that likewise provides an electrical isolation.

(Figure 1)